PREFACE

THE PRESENT VOLUME gives the basic economic characteristics of the population as revealed through the decennial Census of 1971 in the State of West Bengal. The decadal growth rate of population between 1961-1971 in West Bengal at 26.87% not only outstripped the national average (24.80%), but also that in eight other States. But looking at the labour participation rate, West Bengal's performance during the last decade has been far below the national average, not to speak of certain other States of the country. The data presented in this volume reveals that only 27.91% of the total population of the State are workers while the national average is significantly higher (32.92%). There has been a substantial fall in the labour participation rate in 1971 compared to the corresponding figure in the previous decade. The shift is all the more striking in the primary sector. While the number of cultivators has hardly grown over the decade there has been a substantial increase in the proportion of agricultural labourers. What is it due to ? Demographers and man-power planners are welcome to delve deep into this problem. To them this present volume will prove to be useful as it not only gives the basic economic classifications but also presents a cross tabulation by eight different broad age-groups.

The tables presented in this volume have been generated on a cent percent tabulation basis. The other economic tables to be constructed on Census results have been processed on a sample basis—10% for the rural areas and 20% for the urban areas. The sample tables will be published through separate publications.

The preparation of Census tables requires the undivided attention and patience of many workers at different levels, right from the sorting of the individual slips to the striking of the final totals for the State. It is difficult to single out individual workers from the various teams engaged for the purpose. I place on record my deep sense of appreciation to all those who worked hard on these tables at different stages, including reading and rereading proofs and seeing the publication through the press.
