Alphabetical List of Villages and Towns in Maharashtra (in Marathi)

PREFACE

The Primary Census Abstract (Village Directory) appearing in the District Census Handbooks provides for each village and town, besides the basic Census data, information regarding amenities including Weekly Markets existing in the village and town. For the first time the District Census Handbook of 1961 also provides a complete list of villages with weekly markets in the district along with a district map showing the location of such market villages. In the discussions with Shri Asok Mitra, Registrar General, it was agreed that a Monograph providing a complete list of Weekly Markets in Maharashtra State might be brought out. Accordingly, we have published this Monograph on Weekly Markets of Maharashtra. We may be failing in our duty if we do not record our gratefulness to Shri Asok Mitra, who had always been a source of inspiration to all of us and from whom we have received encouragement in our endeavours.

In planning of this monograph, we have received expert advice and guidance from Shri B. A. Kulkarni, I.A.S., Superintendent of Census Operations, and now Municipal Commissioner, Poona. Sarvashri N. Y. Gore, Tabulation Officer, K. K. Akolkar and D. S. Pilpile, Statistical Assistants rendered valuable assistance in preparation of this Monograph. Shri S. Y. Pradhan, Draughtsman prepared line drawings and sketches appearing in the Monograph as well as its cover page.

We are grateful to Shri S. A. Sapre, Manager, and the staff of the Government Central Press, Bombay, for excellent printing and in bringing out this Monograph in reasonable time inspite of various commitments.

INTRODUCTION

This publication presents a Districtwise and Talukawise list of weekly markets in rural and urban areas of Maharashtra State. It also includes maps for all Districts showing weekly markets and the days on which they are held except the district of Greater Bombay where weekly markets are not of much significance. Along with the names of villages where weekly markets are held, the list provides useful information in regard to amenities like postal, medical, educational facilities, etc., available at such market places and also furnishes figures of 1961 population of each place.

2. This list of weekly markets (shown in Appendix II) is a by-product of the compilation of ancillary data collected for the 1961 Census. The Village Directory or the Primary Census Abstract published in Part I of the 1961 District Census Handbooks mentions the existence of weekly markets and a list of weekly markets in the District is included in Part III along with the District map showing villages where such markets are held. The list presented here is more elaborate in that it includes information on the following additional items of basic amenities available.

(1) Name of Village/Town.
(2) Census Location Code Number.
(3) 1961 Population.
(4) Bazar Day.
(5) Existence of Cattle Market.
(6) Transport facilities.
(7) Postal facilities.
(8) Educational Institutions.
(9) Medical facilities.
(10) Regulated Markets.
(11) Banking facilities.
(12) Electrification.

3. In compiling this list, the Census Enumerators' Reports prepared at the time of the 1961 Census Operations as well as the material supplied by the District Statistical Offices for the District Census Handbooks have been used.

4. Identification of the exact location of the villages and towns having weekly markets will be facilitated by a reference to the Census Location Code numbers shown in the list as well as in the maps. These code numbers were given to all villages and towns at the time of the 1961 Census Operations on the basis of geographical contiguity, the direction followed being North-West to South-East. Since the maps show the location of only those villages having markets by code numbers, the numbers may not appear to be continuous or exhaustive.

5. The term ' market ' is one of the most loosely used words in the marketing literature. The Concise Oxford Dictionary defines ' Market ' as " a gathering of people for purchase and sale of provisions, livestock, etc., open space or covered building in which cattle etc. are exposed for sale ", Chambers's Twentieth Century Dictionary,1961, defines ' market ' as " a periodic concourse of people for the purposes of buying and selling : a building, square, or other public place used for such meetings : (U. S.) a shop : a region in which there is a demand for goods etc. " In Webster's New International Dictionary of the English Language, 1914 definition of ' market ' is given as " A meeting together of people, at a stated time and place, for the purpose of traffic (as in cattle, provisions, wares, etc.), by private purchase and sale, and, usually, not by auction ; also, the people assembled at such a meeting; as a market is held in the town every week ". Section 2, sub-clause (4) of the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1939, has defined ' Market ' as ' A market established for the purpose of the Act '. Rule 2, sub-clause (8) further explains that market includes market proper, a principal market yard and a sub-market yard, if any. These definitions are based on usage or expediency. Bazzar (buh-zahr) is a popular term for an oriental market place. The vernacular terms generally used for markets are बाजार, हाट, मंडई, मंडी, गुजरी, विपणी, कोठी, गुदडी, गोला, गंज, etc. According to Encyclopaedia Britannica, ' Bazzaar ' (Pers : bazar, market) is " a permanent market or street of shops, or, a group of short narrow streets of stalls under one roof (Pers, bazar, market). The word has spread westward into Arabic, Turkish and European languages, and eastward it has invaded India, where it has been generally adopted. In Southern India and Ceylon bazaar means a single shop or stall. The Malayan peoples have adopted the word as pazar. The meaning of the word has been much extended in English, where it is now equivalent to any sale, for charitable or mere commercial purposes, of mixed goods and fancy work."*

6. There are different types of markets such as the local markets which are next to the door of the grower, primary wholesale markets where the commodity is bought and sold in bulk and the retail markets where the commodity is sold to the consumer. Markets are also classified according to the destination of the sale, i.e. the consumer, the local merchant and the processor, the wholesale buyer within the area who buys for export or despatch to other State, or the consumer and the retail merchants in the terminal markets.

7. The Bombay Provincial Banking Enquiry Committee says, " Broadly speaking, every village is a market for export and for perishable crops, as buyers and sellers meet there and settle bargains. The term (Market) is, however, popularly applied only to village bazars, and to village, town or city centres where crops of all kinds or of any particular kind are brought for sale. The weekly bazars or markets held at villages and towns, which are a common feature of the Deccan, the Karnatak and the Konkan are governed almost wholly by custom. The day of the week, the time of holding the bazar and often the place in the village have been fixed by custom. If a weekly market is to be held in a new place, the District Magistrate's approval is necessary under the Markets and Fairs Act (Bombay Act of 1860). At such bazars, sales are made direct to the purchasers and for cash. Besides local traders, agents of outside merchants, pedlars, put up their temporary booths. Agricultural produce, cattle and articles of domestic requirements such as cloth and bangles, etc., are brought for sale. Thus, they are both collecting and distributing centres. In some places, such as Poona, there is a special market for cattle, while markets for fodder, often well organised, are to be found in several towns.

* Encyclopaedia Britannica 1959, Vol. 3, pp. 244.

In Gujerat there are generally no weekly bazars or organised markets."*

8. In the mofussil area the main agencies for disposal of local produce and distribution of imports are pedlars, village shops, weekly markets, fairs and trade centres.

Village Pedlars

9. The lowest link in the chain of internal trading activities is the village pedlar who goes hawking merchandise from village to village. This class of merchants still plays quite an important role in the trade organisation although the system of peddling has undergone considerable changes in recent years. In the olden days, pedlars belonged to certain specified classes, namely, Gujaratis, Lingayats and Marwar Vanis besides some classes of professionals such as Oilmen, Weavers, Gardeners, Tailors, Betel-leaf vendors, etc. In course of time the Vanis gave up this form of trade and settled down in villages and towns as regular shopkeepers. Very recently, however, displaced persons from West Pakistan who have migrated to various parts of Maharashtra have taken up the work of peddling in Poona, Thana, Kolhapur, Sangli and other areas. These pedlars, old and new, usually move from village to village when the reaping season is over and return to their places just before the commencement of the monsoon. They sometimes carry their goods on the backs of horses or bullocks, but many on their own backs. In some areas bicycles have replaced bullock carts and horses. The pedlars obtain their stocks of merchandise from nearby towns and sell them in rural areas, market towns and fairs within the circuit. They are usually known to their customers. There are various types of pedlars, each dealing in a particular class of commodities, a grocer in grains, garden fruits, vegetables and spices, a copper-smith in metal wares, a gold-smith in cheap ornaments, a betel-leaf vendor in betel leaves ; and an oilman in oil and ghee. Some pedlars hawk cloth, ready-made garments, perfumes, etc. Most of the transactions are on cash basis. Hawkers are counterparts of pedlars who play an important part in the retail trade of big towns and cities.

10. It seems that the growing importance of weekly bazars and fairs does not give much scope for pedlars going from village to village. The villagers, who otherwise used to patronise the pedlars' trade, now show a preference for the periodical markets. They now obtain their necessities either from the village shops or from the weekly bazars held in the villages. Some pedlars also hawk their goods in weekly markets and fairs held within their reach.

Village Shops

11. Most of the large villages have now at least one or two shops. The shop-keepers are generally Gujaratis, Marwaris, Kutchies popularly known as 'Vanis', and local Vaishya community which deals in groceries, spices, gram, salt, oil, pulses, tea powder, safety matches, sugar, molasses, small stationery articles and other supplies. They obtain the more lasting wares at one of the chief trade centres in the district or at some large fair. Most of their stocks are, however, brought from time to time at the nearest markets or taluka headquarter towns or from the producers. As the rich lay in the bulk of their yearly requirements of grain and groceries by buying them in the larger markets, they take from the village shop-keepers only such articles like butter, oil, sugar, tea powder, etc. The middle and poor classes draw almost all their requirements, except those of the commodities they themselves produce, from the village shop-keeper and pay either ready cash or have a weekly or monthly account. Resident customers pay either in cash or by monthly accounts and outsiders by ready money.

12. Every village in Maharashtra is within the reach of one or more bazars held on different days of the week. In addition there is one or more shops in most of the villages which provide the inhabitants with their day-to-day requirements. The articles sold in these shops are all kinds of grains, such groceries as salt, oil, chillies, sugar, coconuts, soap, tea, tobacco, betel-nuts and other articles required by the people for their use. There are in all 273,238 shops in the State. 120,816 or 44·22 per cent are in rural areas and 152,422 or 55 78 per cent in urban areas. These do not include the shops temporarily set up in the weekly markets or fairs. The number of shops per 1,000 dwellings is 36·4 for the State as a whole, 22·2 for rural areas and 74·3 for the urban areas. Thus urban areas have 3⅓ times more shops per 1,000 dwellings than in the rural areas. Districtwise distribution of shops in Maharashtra is shown in the following table :—

Weekly Markets

13. The bulk of the internal trade is carried on in the periodical village markets and permanent market centres in big villages and towns. The District Headquarters and most of the Taluka Headquarters function as permanent market centres. In certain villages and urban areas periodical markets are held. "The other important market where the producer sells his produce is the bazar held on fixed days in a convenient village for the benefit of the surrounding villages. These bazars as well as the street markets in the villages provide an easy access to the agriculturists for contacting the prospective buyers. It is estimated that approximately a third of the total agricultural output, is sold in these markets."*

14. The periodical markets are known as painths or hats in Uttar Pradesh, Bihar and Orissa, as hats in Bengal and as shandies in Southern India. In many places in Maharashtra these are called 'Athavda Bazar' ('आठवडा बाजार'). A slight distinction is, however, sometimes conveyed by these terms. "For instance, in Uttar Pradesh a painth generally denotes a periodical market which deals more in agricultural produce than in livestock or livestock products, whereas in a 'hat' (हाट) the reverse is the case. In Madhya Pradesh these markets are known as hats or bazars while in Bengal, hat and bazar are not strictly synonymous. A hat which is held oftener than once or twice a week is no longer called a hat but is termed a bazar."

15. In Maharashtra word 'hat' is used only in some of the rural weekly markets of Nagpur and Aurangabad divisions. The term hat meaning bazar has been used in the early Marathi literature†. Nowadays bazar and hat are almost synonymous in most of the areas and "बाजार हाट" is a common term usually used for marketing.

*Report of Expert Committee on the Review of the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1939, para 80.

†Mukteshwar, the grandson of the great saint Eknath has made use of it in the 'Harischandrakhyana'.

(3) A reference to 'Hat' is also found in Dnyaneshwari.

There are also several proverbs in Marathi based on the term 'Hat' e.g.

मराठी म्हणी: (१) हटी जेवण मठी निद्रा (स्वैराचार दाखविण्यासाठी योजतात). (२) हट गोड आहे परंतु हात गोड नाही (बाजारी माल चांगला आहे पण तयार करणारा चागला नाही). (३) हटास ओघळ जाणे (रेलचेल समृद्धि असणे).

We also find the term 'हाट' used in कवीश्वर भास्करभट्ट बोरीकर विरचित उद्धवगीता (४०६) and शिशुपाळवध (३२९) both edited by Shri V. B. Kolte.

16. The 1931 Census Report of Central Provinces and Berar (page 75) vividly describes the Market village in following words :

"……The bazar village corresponded, and still corresponds in many respects, though on a smaller and more primitive scale, with the small market town in rural areas in England. A large village with a weekly or bi-weekly bazar will be found all over the province at distances of 5 to 10 miles, serving the surrounding villages. Go through any of those surrounding villages in the afternoon of the bazar day, and you will find it practically deserted. But if you proceed on to the bazar village, you will find all the countryside collected. Many of these village bazars are now under the management of the district council, who arrange for the sanitation and have often constructed chabutras or raised platforms for stalls, sometimes covered in to keep off the sun and rain and make charges in return for the use of these sites for stalls. Here will sit, with their wares spread out before them, the purveyors of all those commodities required in rural life. The local Kachis or market gardeners will be there with their onions, pumpkins, melons, vegetables, etc. There will be the grocers with their salt condiments, haldi (turmeric), etc., and the oil-sellers with sweet oil and the coarse red kerosene oil which is now used for lighting, and which is purchased by the bottle. There will be the weavers with the home-made saries and dhotis, etc., while nowadays there may be some mill-made cloth imported from outside. There will be stalls for the sale of glass bangles, cheap anklets and bracelets of silver alloy, combs and cheap hand looking-glasses, etc., so popular nowadays. There will be some leather workers with the gaily decorated country shoes ; and some sellers of country tobacco and pan, etc., etc. Cartwheels, carved doors, whips, leather thongs, rope, etc., and numerous other articles will be for sale here, all of local manufacture. To many of these bazars the small cultivators still take small quantities of grain which they sell retail and with the proceeds make their petty purchases. The larger bazars may also have risen to the rank of cattle markets and here cattle, young and old, will be brought for sale to cultivators who require them, or in some tracts, to the Kasai (butcher) for slaughter, although in many tracts Hindu sentiment is proving too strong for this latter class. Sometimes the local bazar is also a grain market, where dealers come for purchase and wholesale export to the rail head. Sometimes ghee also may be purchased for export in the same way. To the bazar nearly every one will go, sometimes from considerable distances, in their country carts or damnis. The womenfolk particularly will be there in large numbers, often decked out in their best clothes. They go not always to make purchases, but here they meet their friends, wander about and hear the latest gossip of the country side, and enjoy the weekly outing. In fact, with the exception of occassional visits to the large religious fairs such as Burmanghat on the banks of the Nerbudda in Narsinghpur, or to marriages, etc., the weekly visit to the bazar village is one of the few outings which occur to break the monotony of village life. In the tracts more cut off from the towns grain is still the chief medium of exchange and the supply of money required for implementing the exchange of commodities at some of these bazars is sometimes surprisingly small. But the money changer, who changes silver into copper coins for a small charge, will still usually be found. Some of these petty tradesmen reside in the bazar village if it is a big one, but nowadays, with improved communications, there are numerous petty grocers or hawkers who travel round to the various small bazars selling their wares and often purchasing small quantities of ghee and grain in exchange. Thus the needs of the villager, food, grain, clothing, cattle, etc., were, and still can be, met in or near his village in the countryside."

17. The above description of a village market given some thirty years ago holds good even now.

18. As a rule periodical markets are held weekly or bi-weekly. In the erstwhile Bombay Presidency, now distributed among the States of Maharashtra and Mysore, Andhra Pradesh and Madras weekly markets predominate ; while in other States such as Assam, Bihar, Orissa, Uttar Pradesh and Kerala bi-weekly markets are also common. There are 3,040 weekly markets in the rural areas of Maharashtra of which the 22 shown on the next page are bi-weekly markets.

Location of Market

19. Periodical markets are usually held on pieces of open land or in groves along roadsides within the village or in close proximity to the village site (गावठाण). In some villages they are held on the road passing through the villages much to the inconvenience and obstruction to the road traffic. They are also held along river banks, in the compounds of temples or areas specially allotted for the purpose by local bodies. "In some places these markets are held in villages having a school so that services of school teacher can be utilised for collection of fees levied in the markets." In places where cattle markets are also held different sites are allotted to cattle markets and the producers markets as the former requires adequate open land for exhibition of animals. In villages where markets are held in open places, preference is generally given to the sites having trees for shade or Dharmashala or other amenities.

20. Petty traders, pedlars and hawkers set-up small booths or stalls. The booths are generally set-up overnight or early morning and at an early hour the market is thronged by people from villages around. Shelter from sun is usually provided by improvised structures consisting of cloth or canvas supported by wooden poles. Such stalls are erected by small traders in cloth, readymade garmets, etc., who use their own material like canvas or hessian cloth for these stalls. The structure is generally rectangular in shape (8′ × 10′) with 4 bamboo poles on four sides with central pole having canvas spread on it. Some of the traders occupy places under shade of a tree. Some of those who bring their merchandise by bullock cart prefer to exhibit the goods near the cart. A few stall holders manage with just an umbrella to protect them from sun. In addition to these, there may be some semi-permanent sheds with thatched, tiled or zinc sheet roofing. Articles for sale are exhibited either loose or in containers, usually on the ground (sometimes on beaten earth flooring), though in some instances pucca or semi pucca platforms are also found to exist.

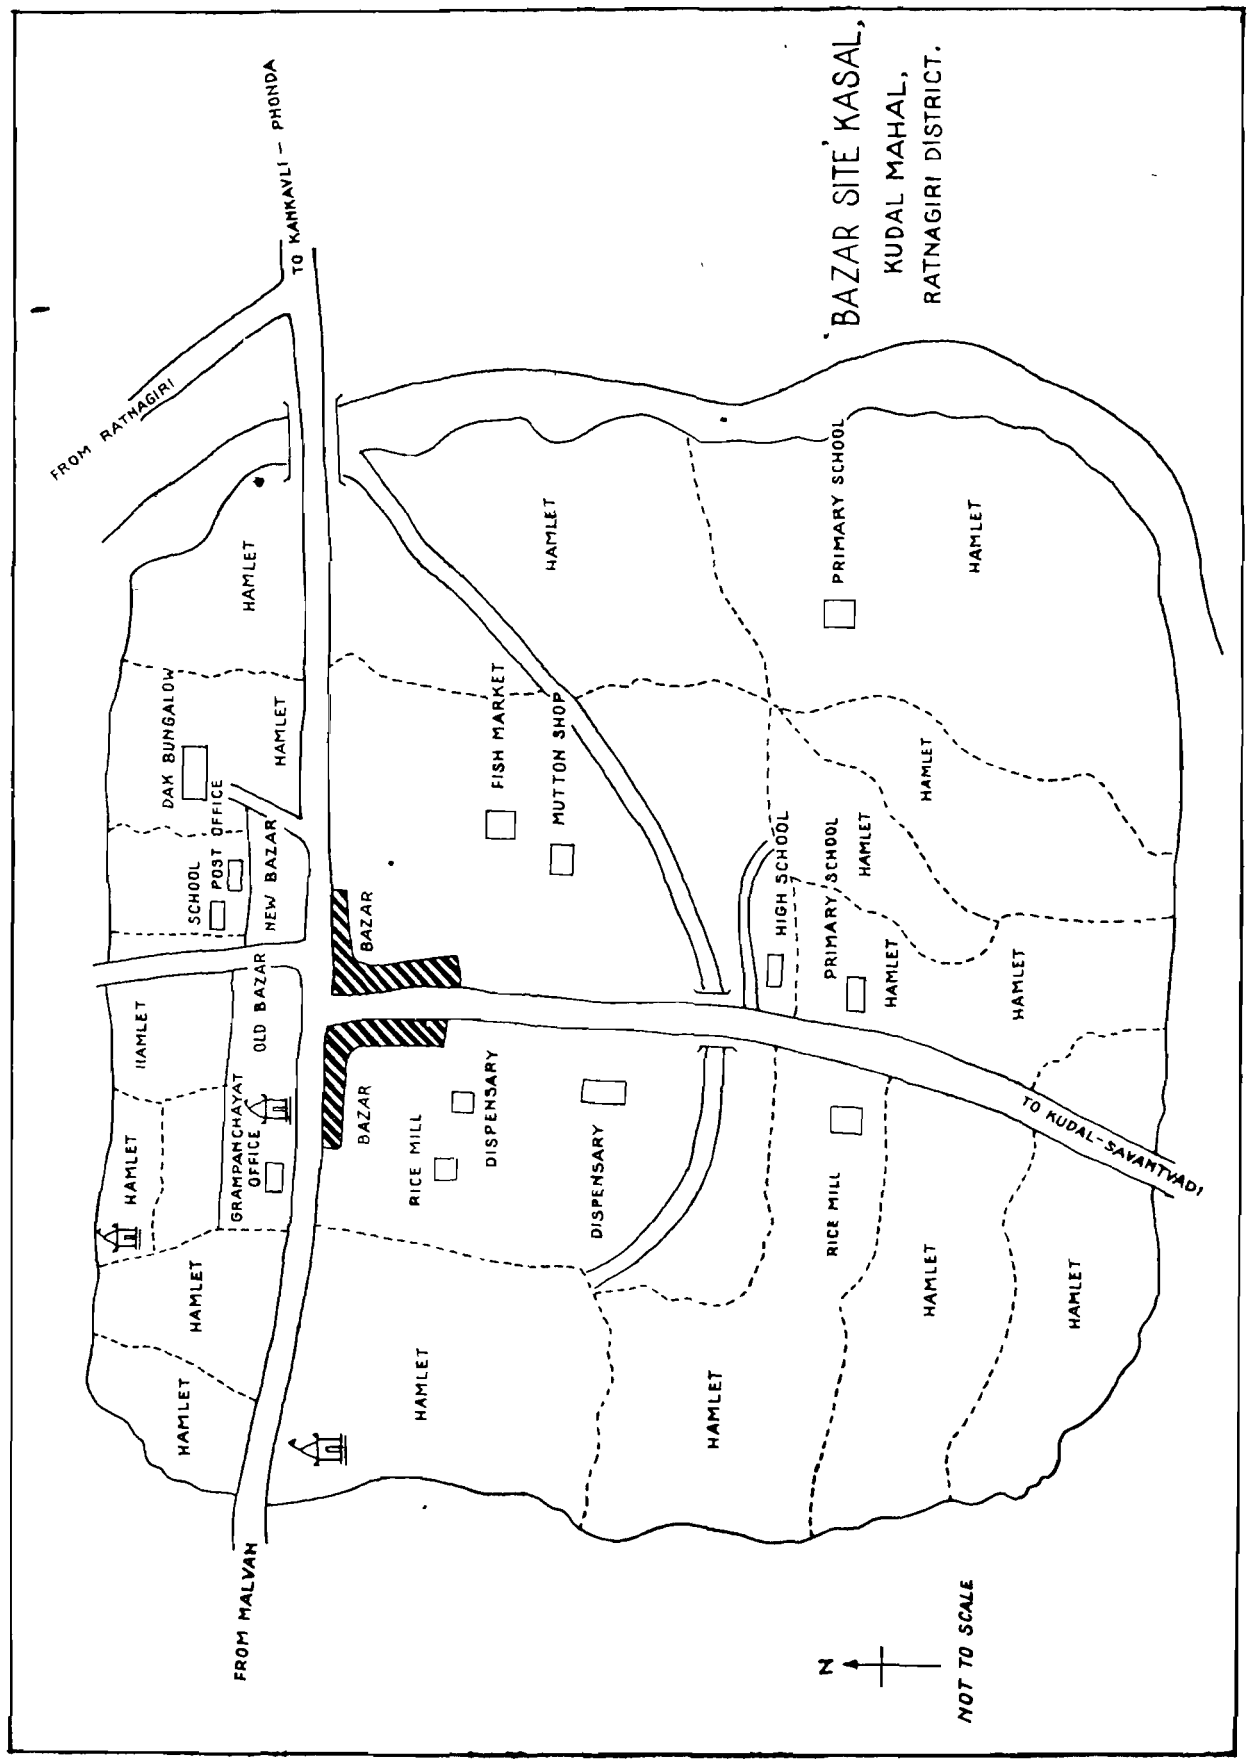

Area served by Market

21. The market village has a connecting link with various villages which surround it. The hinter-land of the market is generally decided by the communication and transport facilities and by natural physical barrier of the region. There are points at which market area may overlap that of another market village or town. There may be some natural zones between these areas but on the whole there is no clear cut line of demarcation as such. However, each market village or town has a definite and recognisable area and looks upon the people of certain villages as its primary customers and in turn it is regarded by villagers as their own market village. Most of the periodical markets serve an area of 5 to 10 miles radius (पंचक्रोशी) though in the case of big markets the area served is much wider. For instance, Lasalgaon and Malegaon in Nasik district and Kankavli in Ratnagiri district serve an area of a radius of more than 30 miles. The table on page 5 shows district and talukawise average rural area per weekly market in the State.

This table is based on the list of weekly markets given in Appendix II. All Taluka Headquarters which have weekly markets or daily markets are included in this Appendix. Those Taluka Headquarters which have no weekly markets or daily markets are excluded from the Appendix.

22. There are in all 3,284 weekly markets in Maharashtra State of which 244 are in the urban areas and 3,040 in the rural areas. It will be seen from the above statement that the average rural area per weekly market in the State works out to slightly more than 35 square miles. The districts which have a larger area per weekly market than the State average are Thana, Kolaba, Ratnagiri, Nasik, Dhulia, Ahmadnagar, Poona, Sholapur, Aurangabad, Parbhani, Nanded, Osmanabad, Buldhana and Chanda districts. It is a significant fact to note that the average area per weekly market is comparatively lower in all the districts of Nagpur Division except Chanda district, which has large proportion of its area under forest and hence lesser communication facilities. The large number of markets and lower average area per market for Nagpur Division is due to the fertile cotton tract of Vidarbha Region and better communication facilities. The higher average for Dhulia appears to be due to lesser number of markets in backward areas like Akrani Mahal, Akalkuva and Shirpur talukas. On account of single crop economy, comparatively little marketable surplus available and transport difficulties there are less number of markets in coastal area and therefore the average area per weekly market is comparatively more.

Attendance

23. Attendance in different weekly markets varies from a hundred persons to several thousands depending upon the importance of the market. For instance, in the markets of Amboli in Ratnagiri district, Takli Kumbharkara in Parbhani district and Wadali in Dhulia district, attendance on any particular market day hardly exceeds 100, whereas in Kankavli, Dondaicha, Kurduwadi, Ichalkaranji, Manwath, Hinganghat, Karanje, etc., attendance may be more than 5,000. Attendance in the market varies with the season, local festivals and the prevalence of epidemics in the locality. The markets held two or three weeks prior to important festivals are generally well attended. In the rainy season, attendance is invariably poor. It also goes down during harvesting and sowing seasons, as the cultivators are preoccupied with agricultural operations. As a general rule, attendance in periodical markets is said to be maximum during winter, medium during summer and minimum during the rainy season. The outbreak of epidemics in a locality adversely affects attendance, particularly when it occurs in the village where a market is held. In cases of severe epidemics the markets affected may even have to be closed.

Commodities sold

24. The main commodity transacted in these markets is the agricultural produce of the locality. As is natural the amount of various types of agricultural produce handled varies with the season. As a rule, larger quantities are handled during the mid-season than in the early or the late season. Besides this, the amount of produce handled on rainy days is generally much less than that on dry days. The agricultural produce handled in these markets is of diverse nature.

25. In addition to foodgrains, oil seeds, pulses, gur (unrefined sugar), tobacco, vegetables, fruits, etc., are also sold. Besides these, livestock and livestock products like ghee, butter, eggs, poultry, hides and skins are handled in some of the periodical markets. Apart from agricultural produce, other articles needed by producers and village folk for their domestic requirements, e.g., cloth , salt, spices, oils, earthen pots, metallic vessels, mats, baskets, bangles, trinkets, oil-cakes, coir gunny bags, blankets, sarees and khans, brooms, ropes, shoes, fodder, etc., are also retailed.

26. The types of agricultural produce sold in the market depends mostly upon the commodities produced in the surrounding tracts. For instance, paddy, rice and fish are more common in the markets of coastal areas whereas sale of jowar, bajri, wheat, groundnut etc. are predominant in periodical markets held in Aurangabad, Poona and Nagpur Divisions. Even in the same area, some markets are more known for particular types of produce than others. In recent years one also finds ready-made clothes, soap, plastic bangles, toys, stationery articles and hardware sold in some of the weekly markets.

27. Prior to monsoon season, materials such as bamboo, reeds, required for house repairing are brought for sale in large quantities especially in village markets in coastal areas. Similarly, in certain areas weekly bazars from Chaitra to Mriga Nakshatra are known for brisk transactions in grass and fodder which is required to be stored before rains.

28. In some bazars the stalls are arranged or grouped according to types of commodities sold. Traders dealing in similar commodities occupy the same section thus forming more or less specialised markets. Generally, foodgrains and grocery stalls are found at one place and vegetable and fruit dealers prefer to sit together. Both these types are well segregated from stall selling fish, mutton, eggs or hides or skin. In some small village markets, however, the stalls are found inter-mixed. The mutton and fish stalls are geneally located at some distance in the shade of a tree. In many of the villages, mutton is available for sale only on the bazar day.

Method of business

29. (a) Hours of business :—The weekly markets are held generally for the whole day. In some places they are held during the afternoon and are closed in the evening. The hours of business in the markets vary in different tracts. Where markets are organised and controlled by local bodies the timings are usually from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. In certain other areas, the usual hours are from noon to sunset. In some markets buying and selling takes place in the forenoon whereas in others trading goes on throughout the day. In the major markets, hours of business are from early morning till late in the evening while in the case of smaller ones business activity is at its maximum in the afternoon. The excitement generally reaches its peak at noon and, then begins the decline. Soon the roads are filled once more with home bound villagers but marketing may continue until late afternoon. In some markets trading goes on even after sunset. Businessmen, stall-holders and other merchants come in the forenoon while producers and other villagers from surrounding areas usually reach in the afternoon. Wherever transport facilities are available, people from surrounding villages reach the market on the same day. Where such facilities are lacking, people from distant places sometimes come to the bazar village on the preceding day.

(b) Business practices :—Business in weekly markets is mostly transacted between sellers and buyers direct, i.e., without employing any intermediaries. In live-stock section of some periodical markets or in major cattle markets, the services of brokers are often utilised. Some of the sellers are themselves the producers of the goods they sell and others are either dealers or their agents from the neighbouring town or a village. The buyers are the people of all castes in the market place or villages round about. The business is carried on mostly on retail basis and therefore the turnover in the market is generally small. Transactions are mostly done on cash basis though in certain tribal areas in Satpura ranges, Thana and Chanda districts barter system still continues. Some of the local traders in grain or local permanent shop-keepers sell their commodities on credit to the local or outside buyers fully known to them.

Generally, the villagers bring grain or any other local produce with them which they sell in the market, and with money obtained they purchase spices, sugar, salt, cloth, shoes, kerosene, match boxes, implements of cultivation, etc. "Haggling is a common feature of these markets. One does not know whether he is getting a square deal. No doubt, there is competition between the sellers, but the difficulty is that the articles are not standardised. For example one shoemaker might demand Rs. 2/-for his pair, whilst the other Rs. 1/4/- only. If a shoemaker wants to sell a pair for Rs. 1/4/- he will start somewhere at Rs. 2/8/-. A good deal of time and energy are wasted in higgling."

Recent observations in tribal weekly market at Warse, Sakri Taluka, Dhulia District indicate that barter, cheating, higgling, credit transactions and absence of standard weights and measures are still common features. The tribal folks bring with them small quantities of grains like jowar, wheat, rice, vari, nagli, maize, bengal gram or some forest produce like ritha (soap-nut), dink (gum-arabic), etc. After bartering or selling these products they make their weekly purchases from the market. Some villagers bring seasonal vegetables and honey. केजा (Keja) is a local word used for barter in certain tracts of western Maharashtra. The tribal people barter away grains in exchange for vegetables, onions, spices, potatoes, parched rice, fried gram, etc. Some of them bring eggs and fowls which are usually in much demand by traders who later on export the same to Surat and other places. It is a common sight to see a purchaser of fowls keeping a watch on persons bringing fowls to the markets and contact them at earliest, even on their way. The traders then enter into forced bargaining and after much of higgling the transaction is settled. The tribal people some time do not get an opportunity to ascertain the market price or contact purchasers at the market places.

Cash transactions are confined to edible oil, kerosene, low quality gur, black salt, mutton, dry fish, cutlery articles, etc. Cloth, ready-made garments, cotton blankets, chadder, etc. are some times purchased on credit. Most of the traders in these goods are money lenders and it is reported that exorbitant rates of interest are charged by them. The recovery of loans or the amount of commodities bought of credit, normally commences after the harvest. Loans are usually repaid in kind and the traders are seen moving from village to village for collection of dues in grain.

(c) Organisation and Control :—From the point of view of organisation and control, the weekly markets can be classified into (i) private markets and (ii) public markets. Private markets are organised and controlled by landlords, temple authorities, etc., owning the site of the markets. Public markets are held under the supervision of district officers or local bodies like municipalities, Village Panchayats, etc. In Maharashtra, the private markets are mostly absent. In the latter the district officers or officers of the local bodies maintain law and order though in the case of some of the major markets, the help of the police is also sought. Disputes are generally settled by traders themselves or by Village Panchayats. Assistance from police or other agency is rarely sought.

Gram Panchayats are mostly responsible for the management of periodical markets in villages under their jurisdiction. They periodically auction the right to collect charges from the traders. The auctioneers, however, have no other rights in management or control over bazars except collection of market charges from the dealers. The Auctioneer appoints with the consent of Panchayat one or more persons, generally on daily wages. These employees move in the bazar and collect their dues and pass receipt.

Village Panchayat notifies auction with terms and conditions about 15 days prior to the date of auction. The Auctioneers are generally well-to-do persons or local landlords.

Market charges

30. The rates of charges for markets are fixed by local bodies (the Village Panchayats or Zilla Parishads) and are notified for public information. The markets are leased out by auction to private persons subject to certain conditions including levy of charges to be collected from the sellers in the markets. The charges levied in the periodical markets and also the method of levying them vary in many places and some time admit periodical variations. There are generally three types of charges levied in these markets, viz., (i) charges for space occupied, (ii) charges on containers of commodities, and (iii) charges on sale of produce. The first two of these are most common. The charges for space vary with the area occupied. Those on containers vary with the type of container, i.e., cart load (गाडी), gunny load (गोणी), and basket load (बुट्टी). Those on sale of produce depend on the quality and quantity brought for sale. In certain markets shops of cloth, grocery, grain, brass and other utensils, etc., pay specific charges for shop. Charges for grocery, vegetables, oils and other merchandise are also fixed according to quantities exposed for sale.

31. Specimen of receipt of charges passed on behalf of Village Panchayat Ajra, Ajra Mahal, Kolhapur District is reproduced on the next page. The charges in this market are levied on area occupied and on quantity and type of commodities exposed for sale.

Transaction of Cotton in Vidarbha Region

32. Four districts of Vidarbha of Nagpur Division form the cotton growing tract. Different varieties mostly of improved cotton are now-a-days sown in the area which bring good sale price.

The small cultivators sell their cotton produce in villages to retail traders. Weights used in the transaction are quintal and kilos. Retail traders purchase cotton in different villages and then sell it in the prominent cotton markets of Amravati, Khamgaon, etc., in Vidarbha Region.

The big landlords who have large quantity of cotton available for sale carry their produce directly to the big cotton markets for sale in bullock carts.

Generally, the cultivators are not directly in contact with the buyers. Middlemen (Dalal) play an important part who charge about Rs. 1·50 for 100 rupees of sale price for the cultivators and also demand 2 annas for rupees 100 of buying price from buyers.

Now-a-days, due to the Co-operative Societies, Multipurpose Societies and Vividh Karyakari Societies, the cultivators take their cotton produce to 'pool' in which they get immediately 75 per cent of the amount of the sale price. Cotton is sold out in 'pool' when there is highest price in markets and the amount advanced to the cultivators previously with addition to nominal extra charge as godown charge, storage, etc., is deducted and the net amount is returned to the cultivators. Another advantage of this system is that cultivators can get improved varieties of cotton seeds and also of good quality from 'pool' which can fetch good prices for their produce.

Weights and Measures

33. In large number of village markets the primary producers sell their products such as vegetables, grains, forest produce, dry fish, fruits, etc., in bundles, baskets or heaps (वाटा) without either measuring or weighing. In most places local measures of volume are used for measuring edible oil, kerosene, etc. The standard (metric) weights and measures are used in big village markets and those held near Taluka Headquarters or big towns. In other places very rarely stalls use standard scales of weight. In some places for sale of grain, chira, muri, etc., old measures of capacity such as Adholi, Seer, Pailee, etc., are still being used. In certain markets in tribal areas it will not be out of place to see a trader using a 'Dalda' tin as well as stone slabs of different sizes for measuring or weighing grains respectively.

Distribution of Weekly Markets

34. Out of 3,040 periodical village markets in the State, Nagpur Division accounts for 1,314 or 43·22 per cent, Poona Division for 711 or 23·39 per cent, Aurangabad Division for 575 or 18·92 per cent and Bombay Division for 440 or 14·47 per cent. Akola, Amravati, Yeotmal and Wardha Districts together have over one-fourth of the total market places in the State. Kolaba District records only 20 such markets, while figures for Thana, Ratnagiri and Dhulia are 41,70 and 58 respectively. The smaller number of weekly markets in the Konkan area may be due to the single crop economy of the region with little to offer as local produce for sale and nearness to permanent local markets in urban areas and greater economic dependence on Bombay City. The following table shows the districtwise distribution of weekly markets by their population sizes.

Distribution of Village markets by their population Sizes.

35. The number of periodical markets progressively increases with the size of population upto a population of about 5,000 and thereafter, it decreases. The general indication is that the medium size villages in the range of 1,000 to 5,000 population constitute large percentage of the total number of periodical markets. Whereas population size group below 1,000 accounts for only 21·51 per cent of the total periodical markets the size groups 1,000 to 1,999 and 2,000 to 4,999 account for 33·45 and 35·82 per cent respectively. In the size group 5,000 to 9,999 only 8·29 per cent of the villages are found. Only 28 weekly market villages have more than 10,000 population.

36. The highest number of village weekly markets (84) is found in Gondia Taluka of Bhandara District. There are three other talukas which have more than 50 weekly markets viz., Amravati and Chandur Talukas of Amravati District, with 61 and 58 markets, respectively and Darwha Taluka of Yeotmal District with 56 markets. There are 13 Talukas which do not have any periodical market. They are (1) Kalyan and (2) Thana Talukas in Thana District, (3) Panvel Taluka and (4) Uran, (5) Murud and (6) Poladpur Mahals in Kolaba District, (7) Dapoli, (8) Khed, (9) Guhagar and (10) Chiplun Talukas in Ratnagiri District, (11) Akrani Mahal in Dhulia District, (12) Poona City Taluka in Poona District and (13) Mahabaleshwar Mahal in Satara District. Out of 38 Talukas having more than 20 weekly market places each, 31 talukas are from the Nagpur Division. The following table shows the districtwise distribution of talukas in the State according to the number of weekly markets.

37 Periodical markets may be held on any fixed day of a week. A particular market is invariably held on the fixed days. For instance, if a particular weekly market is held on Monday, it will always be held on Monday. The custom of changing market days in cyclic order i.e., holding market in continuous different days in different weeks found in vogue in Khasi and Jaintia hills in Assam is not noticed in Maharashtra.

The following table shows the distribution of villages having weekly markets by day on which market is held:—

38. Considering Maharashtra State as a whole, the weekly markets appear to be more or less evenly distributed over seven days of the week. The number of centres vary from 403 on Tuesday to 483 on Friday, while the percentage variation is from 13 16 to 15·78. In case of one village, market is held on all week days. The figures, however, indicate slight preference for Friday and Wednesday as bazar days. Most of the bazar days have been fixed in the past and traditionally followed even to-day without any changes. Precise reasons for choice of particular day as bazar day are not known. In some cases the bazar day appears to be the same as important day of the fair held in the locality. Even distribution of bazar days, however, suggests that the convenience of traders and pedlars, who have to move from place to place with merchandise including cattle, has weighed more in deciding the bazar days. As a rule, the days on which these periodical markets are held in different centres in a locality appear to be chosen in such a manner as to avoid overlapping with one another as far as possible, so that itinerant dealers can make a round of different markets in a particular area.

39. The following table shows the movement of itinerant traders in different commodities during the week contacted at Kasal market (Kudal Mahal ; Ratnagiri District). These traders are generally on the move for 3 to 5 days during the week including their visits to Head Quarter town for the purpose of replenishing stock of commodities.

40. Inspite of development of roads and increase in quick transport amenities, facilitating frequent contacts of rural population with large permanent market centres, weekly markets appear to have retained their popularity. It will be seen from the following table that the number of markets has shown a substantial increase in the past in the districts for which data are available :—

42. The average rural population per weekly market varies from 3,323 in Amravati District to 8,503 in Buldhana District of Nagpur Division ; from 7,523 in Bhir District to 10,487 in Osmanabad District of Aurangabad Division ; from 9,108 in Sangli District to 12,184 in Sholapur District of Poona Division and from 9,720 in Nasik District to 30,715 in Kolaba District of Bombay Division. The high disparity in average rural population per market between districts in Western Maharashtra and districts in Vidarbha and Marathwada would indicate the greater dependence of the former region on permanent market centres in urban areas and nearness of Greater Bombay as against the dependence of the latter region, a cotton growing tract, on periodical markets for transaction in cotton and other local produce.

The table on page 20 shows the districtwise distribution of periodical markets by availability of various amenities.

Communication

43. Some of the periodical markets are situated in the interior of the State and as such they are not even served by pucca roads. A number of markets lie within easy reach of the railway but the number of markets held at rail heads is only 47. The number of market places connected by road is 1,424 and those connected by both railway and roads are 153. Thus, out of 3,040 market places, 1,624 (or 53·42 per cent) are easily approachable. The proportion of market places served with communications to the total market places varies from 71·00 per cent in Sholapur District to 93·10 per cent in Dhulia District in the erstwhile Bombay State area while it varies from 22 13 per cent in Parbhani District to 57·89 per cent in Buldhana District in Marathwada and Vidarbha regions respectively.

44. The usual means of transport of produce are (i) carrying loads on head in the case of grain, vegetables and fruits etc., brought to the market from surrounding villages, (ii) pack animals like donkey employed in some areas and (iii) cart which is the most common means of transporting produce from distant villages to the markets The carrying capacity of a bullock-cart may be anything from 12 to 25 maunds depending upon the condition of the road, the design of the cart and the strength and number of animals yoked.

45. Most of the persons attending the periodical markets are from the locality or from the neighbouring villages or towns. They usually return to their own village after completion of transactions or the close of the market and are not required to stay at the market places. In case they are required, they prefer to stay with relations or friends rather than at the rest-houses. Out of 3,040 market places only 347 have rest-houses.

46. Postal facilities are available in the case of markets held in big villages and towns. Out of 3,040 market places those having post offices number 2,338, i.e., 76·91 per cent. Of these, 203 market places have telegraphic facilities also.

47. The highest number of market villages having post offices (177) is found in Amravati District. The next in order is Akola District with 148, Ahmadnagar District with 147, Yeotmal District with 126 and Aurangabad District with 115. The respective percentages of market villages having post offices to total market villages in these districts are Amravati (67·82 per cent), Akola (71·50 per cent), Ahmadnagar (88·55 per cent), Yeotmal (64·95 per cent) and Aurangabad (79·86 per cent). The lowest percentage (53·66) is noticed in Thana District.

Primary school

48. Out of 3,040 market villages, 2,957 market villages have the facility of a primary school. The highest number of market villages having Primary Schools (248) is found in Amravati District.

49. Only 1,426 market villages have Middle Schools of which Akola and Amravati Districts account for 125 and 157, respectively. The highest proportion (77·89 per cent) of market villages having Middle Schools is found in Buldhana District. Only 604 market villages in the State have High Schools. Only three districts have 50 or more market villages having High Schools in the State, viz., Satara (59), Sangli (50) and Ahmadnagar (50). The Satara District has the highest proportion (50·43 per cent) of market villages having High Schools to total market villages in the district The next in order of proportions are Sangli with 46·30 per cent, Dhulia with 41·38 per cent, Kolhapur with 39·62 per cent. The lowest proportion (3·28 per cent) is found in Parbhani District.

Dispensaries

50. Slightly more than one-fourth of the market villages are served by medical dispensaries. The proportion of villages having dispensaries in Bombay and Poona divisions is comparatively higher than that in Aurangabad and Nagpur divisions. In the former, this proportion varies from 26·85 per cent in Sangli District to 50·00 per cent in Dhulia District, while in the latter the variation is fr m 7·08 per cent in Bhir District to 39·83 per cent in Nagpur District.

Medical practitioners

51. The rural market villages are well served by medical practitioners as 1,808 villages or 59·47 per cent of the total have medical practitioners. The highest number of market villages with medical practitioners (163) is found in Amravati District. The next in order of number are Bhandara with 119, Akola with 114, Yeotmal with 110 and Ahmadnagar with 97. There are 14 districts which have higher proportions than the average proportion of 59·47 per cent for the State. The highest proportion (77·89 per cent) is found in Buldhana District and the lowest (38·52 per cent) in Parbhani District.

Hospitals

52. Amenities like hospitals are generally provided more in urban centres and large villages. There is, therefore, no wonder that only 3·55 per cent of the market villages have hospitals. Out of 108 market villages where hospital facilities are available, 17 are located in Poona District, 10 in Amravati District, 9 in Satara District and 8 each in Ahmadnagar and Chanda Districts. Kolaba, Bhir and Bhandara Districts have no hospital located in any of their bazar villages.

Banks

53. Banking facilities are generally available where there are permanent trade centres and wholesale trade involving large-scale monetary transactions. The village markets are mostly retail trade centres and, therefore, only in big village market places we find branches of Banks. Banking facilities are available in only 119 market villages out of 3,040 market villages. The highest number of market villages having banks (19) is found in Jalgaon District. The other districts in the order of numbers are Ahmadnagar with 13, Satara with 10 and Nasik and Poona with 9 each Banking facilities are not available in any of the market villages in Kolaba, Parbhani, Osmanabad, Yeotmal and Wardha Districts.

Electricity

54. Existence of electricity has no direct bearing on village markets as the electrical energy is more utilised for domestic consumption and industrial sector than for trade purposes. Out of 3,040 market villages, 330 (or 10·86 per cent) are electrified. The highest number (56) of electrified market villages is noticed in Amravati District. Nagpur, Sangli and Kolhapur Districts have 47, 39 and 36 electrified market villages respectively. The districts having significant proportions of electrified market villages to total market villages are Nagpur with 39·83 per cent, Sangli with 36·11 per cent and Kolhapur with 33·96 per cent. Only in Nasik, Dhulia and Osmanabad Districts there is not a single market village which is electrified.

55. The following table shows the distribution of village weekly markets by amenities available cross-classified by their population size. As can be expected the proportion of market villages having basic amenities progressively increases according to their population size. Larger the population, more amenities are being provided:—

Importance of Weekly Markets

As a centre for selling what the farmer produces and for supplying him with basic necessities of life the village market is indispensable. There is a belief that the development of roads and increase in quick transport facilities offering the farmer easy access to the larger commercial towns would cause a decline in the local market villages. This has, however, not proved to be the case. On the contrary there has been substantial increase in the number of market villages. For one thing, although the farmers may now go more often to the large centres for the goods they cannot buy locally, nevertheless the social life of his own or neighbouring village market and the weight of tradition make them continue to go there. The rapid reduction in their self-sufficient economy in the present times sometimes compel the farmers to buy more goods. All of them do not weave their own cloth or make their own tools and with their new and varied wants may have greater temptation to buy manufactured articles from outside. Therefore, although some of them may go more often to the big centres of trade, their business in the rural markets would not fall off. Gradual penetration of industrialisation and commercialisation with the country-side would make the farmer increasingly dependent upon goods not produced by himself. Most of them produce only the primary foodstuffs on their farms, vegetables in fields and everything else they buy from the market villages or towns. This makes them depend more or less on the markets so that the trade services today play an increasingly important role in the rural economy and in organising the local community. The villages and the outside are becoming more inter-dependent through the agencies of the village or town markets. Undoubtedly the market villages will continue to play an important role in the rural economy of the State

The social aspect attached to these market centres also plays important part in the life of rural communities. Apart from annual fairs or occasional marriages outside the village the village folks look to markets as occasions for outings. Even those who have nothing to buy or sell visit market places regularly to pay social calls or to pass away their time. Women bedecked in good sarees often visit market places. The market village provides opportunities for farmers and others from different villages to meet one another and is in fact one of the few places where they can meet. Farmers always have friends and relatives in other villages and these meetings in the weekly market villages take the place of visits which would be more expensive or inconvenient. When the villagers return home they report to the whole family what they had seen and heard and in this way, people are kept informed about one another. The market villages thus act as meeting places where messages can be communicated and important negotiations in connection with social problems like marriages, house building, money lending, etc., take place.

Annual Fairs

The fairs in Maharashtra as elsewhere in India serve two-fold purpose. They are no doubt religious gatherings of persons belonging to more often than not one particular religion but they also serve as places for exchange of indigenous goods and produce by village artisans. They are thus complimentary to weekly markets so far as commercial transactions are concerned. In a sense they provide an outlet for local goods and talents. Detailed information about fairs in Maharashtra appears in the Census Report, Volume X, Part VII-B, "Fairs and Festivals in Maharashtra".

Cattle Markets

Cattle are generally sold at various sites, viz., farms, open fields, road sides, private premises or compounds, village commons, fair grounds and periodical markets. Although each of these sites serves the two-fold purpose of assembling and distribution of cattle, the last two are most important as the bulk of the trade in cattle is carried out through them.

In Maharashtra the demand for cattle is generally met with from the cattle fairs and weekly markets. Requirements of milch, slaughter and cart cattle of big urban centres are also met through cattle markets.

Cattle fairs

Cattle fairs in Maharashtra are mostly held in conjunction with religious festivals or religious fairs. The visitors to fairs interested in buying cattle can also purchase or sell various other articles. In addition to famous breed of cattle, agricultural implements, cattle equipment like head ornaments, bells, halters, etc., are also sold.

The most striking feature of cattle fairs is that most of them are held in post-monsoon period when the cultivators are not so busy and being harvest period they have money to buy cattle. The four months of rainy season (Jyeshtha to Bhadrapad) are without cattle fair as in this period movement of animals is rendered difficult by inclement weather and bad conditions of roads especially in rural areas. The distribution of cattle fairs according to months in which those are held is shown below :—

Month	No. of cattle fairs
(1) Chaitra (March-April)	8
(2) Vaishakha (April-May)	3
(3) Jyeshtha (May-June)	....
(4) Ashadh (June-July)	....
(5) Shravana (July-August) ..	....
(6) Bhadrapad (August-September) ..	....
(7) Ashvina (September-October) ..	2
(8) Karttika (October-November) ..	3
(9) Margashirsha (November-December)	8
(10) Pausha (December-January) ..	7
(11) Magha (January-February) ..	13
(12) Phalguna (February-March) ..	3

The duration of these fairs varies from a day to some weeks, generally depending upon the duration of the religious festivals in conjunction of which they are held. The fairs at Wani in Yeotmal district and Mhase in Thana district last for 4 and 3 weeks respectively.

In almost all the fairs, cattle (draught and milch) are sold. Certain fairs are, however, famous for transactions in other animals like horses, mules, camels, etc. At Madhi in Ahmadnagar district and Jejuri in Poona district donkeys and mules are sold:—

The following is the list of important cattle fairs in Maharashtra :—

There are 301 periodical cattle markets in Maharashtra State, of which 40 per cent are located in Bombay and Poona Divisions and about 30 per cent each in Aurangabad and Nagpur Divisions. The table on page 25 shows the districtwise number of cattle markets in rural areas of Maharashtra State with their distribution according to transport facilities and days on which they are held.

For quicker movement of animals it is essential that the market places for cattle are well served with transport facilities. As many as 72 per cent of the cattle market places are connected either by Road, Rail or by both. Only about 28 per cent of market places are not connected either by Road or Rail. The percentage of such market places without proper transport facilities is high in Aurangabad Division (57·65 per cent) followed by Nagpur Division (34·12 per cent).

The distribution of market places by days on which the cattle market is held varies from 57 on Tuesdays to 31 on Saturdays. The percentage variation is from 10·30 on Saturdays to 18·94 per cent on Tuesdays. The distribution indicates slight preference for Tuesday as a cattle market day.

The cattle markets are held in open spaces, river banks, road side, etc Except in a few cases, compound walls or fences are not found and separate enclosures for different varieties of cattle are also generally not provided.

Although no regular hours are prescribed in markets for sale of cattle, the transaction carry on as and when convenient to dealers. " In periodical markets buying activities are usually brisk in the afternoon reaching a peak towards the close of the market in the evening. Sellers, it appears, are usually inclined to part with their animals at low prices in order to return home with cash and other necessities. Milkmen make their purchases in the afternoon when they are free from work, while cart-drivers do so during their leisure hours." *

The number of cattle assembled at the markets varies according to the local demand Generally it varies between 20 to 5,000 and the same variety of stock is generally observed as at the fairs. The majority of markets receive their supplies from the surrounding areas.

In the cattle trade through these markets, two units are commonly adopted, viz., per head and per pair. Of these the most widely adopted unit is per head and almost all sales are conducted on this basis. The pair system of purchase is used when pairs of identical animals are required for transport by carts etc. The third unit of sales of cattle viz., is rarely used.

In very few small village cattle markets the transactions are between buyers and sellers but in majority of cases brokers or middlemen operate who contact both sellers and buyers with an assurance of good bargain. Whether a broker intervenes or not, the buyers subject the animals to a thorough examination. This is done through two ways viz., through a careful general inspection and examination of performance. The general inspection is carried out to ascertain age, breed, good and bad points, auspicious or inauspicious marks, health and temperament of animal. The actual performance is sometime insisted to find out the gait, stamina, etc., of the animal. In the case of milch cows and buffaloes the buyers through observation or careful enquiry ascertain particulars regarding age, number and period of lactation and the yield and temperamental habits.

Only after the buyers and the brokers are satisfied by these tests the prices of animals are settled. There are three ways of settling the prices viz., (i) open method, (ii) private treaty and (iii) negotiations under cover. Under the first method the seller announces the sale price of the animal openly and the middleman or buyer announces the price at which he would like to buy the animal. This transaction takes place openly before all those present at sight. In the second method the buyers announce their offer through secret whispers to sellers. Where brokers are engaged to negotiate transactions, there is hardly any contact between the buyers and sellers and offers have got to be made through them. The third method is generally followed when there are more buyers and their offers are to be kept a secret from one another. Buyers or brokers convey their offers to sellers secretly by clasping the latter's fingers to indicate the price under a piece of cloth of rumal (handkerchief).

APPENDIX I

EXTRACTS FROM THE DISTRICT GAZETTEERS

KOLABA AND JANJIRA GAZETTEER, 1883

".....Markets are held at Alibag, Revdanda, Kihim, Poynad, Ramraj, Ambepur and Nagaon in Alibag; at Pen and Nagothna in Pen; at Mangaon and Nizampur in Mangaon; at Roha and Ashtami in Roha; and at Mahad in the Mahad sub-division. Alibag, Revdanda, Pen, Nagothna, Roha, Ashtami and Mahad have daily and the rest have weekly markets. The weekly markets are chiefly distributing centres. The average attendance varies from 200 sellers and 1,500 buyers at Poynad to fifteen sellers and 100 buyers at Nagaon. The chief articles sold are grain pulses, groceries, salt, vegetables, grass, firewood and salt fish. Except vegetables, grass and firewood which are sold by neighbouring villagers and salt-fish by Koli fishermen, these articles are sold by petty dealers who either attend personally or send agents to the markets. Except at harvest time (October-November) when grain is sometimes exchanged for groceries and salt, there is very little barter ....."[1]

NASIK DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1883

".....In every sub-division, weekly or half-weekly markets are held in nine or ten of the towns and larger villages. The market days are known throughout the neighbourhood, and all who have anything to sell or to buy crowd to the market. They are usually held in some open space in the village, and for a few hours in the afternoon are gay and crowded. Almost everything required by the people, grain, salt, spices, pepper, bangles, cooking vessels, coarse hand and machine made cloth and, in some places such as Saykheda, Nasik and Malegaon, ponies and cattle are offered for sale. Small villages generally depend for their supplies or weekly markets. The dealers, who are chiefly Marwar, Gujarat and Ladsakka Vanis and Bagvans, have fixed shops in some neighbouring town or village, and go from one market to another. Generally one member of a family travels, while another stays at home and minds the shop. They do not move much during the rains...."[2]

DISTRICT GAZETTEER, KHANDESH, 1880

"..... ... Next to the chief trade centres, in the distribution and collection of goods, come the market towns. At these towns, on a fixed day in the week a market is held, where, besides the permanent staff of traders and shop-keepers, peddlers, hawkers, and agents for some of the larger dealers set up booths, and offer for sale copper and iron vessels, glass bracelets, turbans, waistcloths, women's robes, coarse cloth, dyes, cotton, oilseed, clarified butter, garden produce, oil and grain. Special markets for livestock, ponies, cattle and sheep are not uncommon. The booths are generally set up over night, and at an early hour the market is thronged by people from the villages round ; and after a slack hour or two in the heat of the day, it again fills towards the evening. Almost all the traffic is done by money. But in several market towns, especially in the more outlying parts in the west, Bhils and other wild tribes bring fuel, honey and lac, and in their season, moha berries and charoli seed, and barter them for cloth and trinkets. When the day is over, the sellers pack what remains and move to the next convenient market town. Though chiefly a means of distribution. these markets give dealers and the agents of export houses a good opportunity for buying or arranging for buying field and other produce....."[3]

AHMADNAGAR DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1884

At these markets the chief articles of trade are cattle, grain, cotton, cloth, groceries, vegetables, blankets, fruits, betel leaves, sweetmeats, drinking and cooking vessels, and shoes. Barter takes place to a limited extent among the Kunbis and other lower classes in cattle and other articles.

Some of these markets are great cattle fairs. At Ghodegaon about twenty miles to the north, and at Valki about ten miles to the south of the city of Ahmadnagar, 300 to 400 bullocks and fifty to 100 cows and buffaloes are brought for sale. At both these markets the sellers are mostly Kunbis, and the buyers, butchers and cattle-dealers who come from Poona, Sholapur, Yeola, Kalyan, and Bombay along the line of the railway, bringing groceries and household and other commodities. Livestock can also be bought at Erandgaon, Sangamner, and Shrigonda. Next to Ahmadnagar the chief grain markets are Vamburi, Bodhegaon, and Sangamner. At Mamdapur the price of a pair of field bullocks ranges for £2-10s. to £6 (Rs. 25-60), of a she-buffalo from £2 to £4-10s. (Rs. 20-45), and of ponies and galloways from £1 to £7-10s. (Rs. 10-75). The markets of Belapur in Rahuri and of Vihirgaon in the Nizam's territory are attended by some Kopargaon landholders while Mamdapur, Rahata, and Korhala in Kopargaon are largely attended by the people of Sangamner. People of almost all castes, Marwaris, Gujaratis, Musalmans, Brahamans, Dhangars, Kunbis, Mahars, Mangs and Lingayat Vanis attend these markets....."[4]

Of these the most important are Baramati, Bhamburde, Dhond, Ghodnadi, Ghotavde, Junnar, Manchar, Sasvad, and Talegaon-Dhamdhere, with an attendance of 150 to 700 sellers and 500 to 2,500 buyers. In the rest the attendance varies from twenty-five to 150 sellers and from forty to 200 buyers. All these markets are distributing centres, and about one-sixth, Baramati, Ghodnadi, Indapur, Junnar, Khed, Sasvad, and Talegaon-Dhamdhere are also gathering centres. The chief articles brought for sale are grain of all sorts, cloth, vegetable and fruit, groceries, species, and other articles of daily use. Besides these articles, shoes, ropes, brooms, baskets, and blankets are offered for sale at Baramati and Sasvad, and cotton at Indapur. The sellers are Vanis, Malis, Momins, Kachhis, Tambats, Tambolis, Confectioners, Mangs, Kolis, and others, some of them producers and others either dealers or dealers' agents, belonging to the market town or to some neighbouring villages. The buyers are people of all castes in the market town and in the neighbouring villages. There is no barter except that small landholders and others, including Mhars, Mangs, Chambhars Ramoshis, Kolis, and Musalmans, who have no money, receive oil, tobacco, vegetables, chillies, and fish in exchange for grain. Cattle markets are held at Ghodnadi, Manchar, Indapur, Baramati, and Junnar once a week, and at Bhamburde near Poona a half-weekly cattle market is held on Wednesdays and Sundays. Horses, ponies, cows, buffaloes, sheep, and goats are brought for sale by Kunbis and others. The chief buyers are Kunbi and other landholders and butchers at the Bhamburde market....." [5]

Of these 90 weekly bazar villages the most important are Baramati, Dhond, Ghodnadi, Ghotavde, Junnar, Manchar, Saswad, Talegaon-Dhamdhere, Chakan, Bhor and Shivatakrar (Nira). Attendance in these weekly bazars varies from 150 to 700 sellers and from 500 to 2,500 buyers. In the rest, the attendance varies from 25 to 150 sellers and from 40 to 200 buyers. All these markets are only distributing centres, except Baramati, Ghodnadi, Indapur, Junnar, Khed, Saswad and Talegaon-Dhamdhere, which are also assembling centres. The chief articles brought for sale are grain of all sorts, cloth, vegetables, fruits, groceries, spices, and other articles of daily use. Besides these articles, shoes, ropes, brooms, sugar (raw and refined), baskets, blankets and soap are also offered for sale in some of the important weekly markets. Some of the sellers are themselves the producers of the goods they sell, and others are either dealers or dealers' agents from the neighbouring town or village. The buyers are the people of market place and the villages round about. The transactions are usually done on cash basis.

Cattle markets are held once a week at Baramati, Ghodnadi Junnar, Indapur and Manchar, and a cattle market is held twice a week in Poona city on Wednesdays and Sundays. Horses, ponies, cows, buffaloes, sheep and goats are brought for sale. In the mofussil places, the chief buyers are the agriculturists...." [6]

SATARA DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1885

Thirty-four weekly and half-weekly markets are held, twelve on Mondays, three on Tuesdays, four on Wednesdays, six on Thursdays, two on Fridays, five on Saturdays and two on Sundays, in twenty-three villages and towns. One is in Wai, at Wai on Mondays and Tuesdays ; two in Javli, at Medha on Mondays and at Malcolmpeth on every day in the week during the fair season ; two in Satara, at Satara on Mondays, Thursdays and Saturdays, and at Parli on Mondays ; two in Koregaon at Rahimatpur on Thursdays and Fridays, and at Kumta on Mondays ; four in Patan, at Patan on Mondays, at Tarla on Saturdays, at Morgiri on Thursdays, and at Dhembevadi on Tuesdays ; five in Karad, at Karad on Sundays and Thursdays, at Vadgaon on Mondays, at Umbraj on Mondays, at Charegaon on Saturdays, and at Belvade on Wednesdays ; two in Valva, at Islampur on Saturdays and at Shirala on Mondays ; one in Tasgaon, at Tasgaon on Mondays and Thursdays ; one in Khanapur at Vita on Mondays ; one in Khatav at Pusesavli on Wednesdays ; and two in Man, at Dahivadi on Mondays and at Mhasvad on Wednesdays. These markets are distributing rather than collecting centres. Except at Belvade and Elur where cows, oxen, buffaloes, ponies, sheep, and other animals are brought for sale, the articles sold at these markets are brass, copper and iron vessels, millet, wheat, gram, pulses, cotton, oilseeds, oil, earth nuts, chillies, turmeric, raw sugar, tobacco, English and country piecegoods, twists, turbans, waistcloths, women's robes or lugdis, fruit and vegetables. Besides peddlers and hawkers who set up booths on the market days and sometimes husbandmen offering their field produce, grain, pulse, raw sugar, fruit, and vegetables, the sellers are shopkeepers and traders generally belonging to the market town. Except where fruit and vegetables are brought early in the morning, these markets fill about two in the afternoon and go on till six. Barter is almost unknown ; all sales are by cash payments. Of late years there has been little change in the numbers who attend the markets..." [7]

SHOLAPUR DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1884

".....Forty-two weekly markets are held in the district, ten in the Sholapur sub-division one each at Begampur, Keshar Javalge, Mandrup, Mangrul, Mardi, Musti, Salgar, Sholapur, Vadale, and Valsang ; four in the Barsi sub-division one each at Barsi, Pangri, Tadvale and Vairag ; eight in the Karmala sub-division one each at Jinti, Karmala, Kem, Kondhej, Korti, Sonari, Tembhurni, and Vangi ; eleven in the Madha sub-division one each at Angar, Ashti, Bemble, Kurdu, Kurduvadi, Kurul, Laul, Madha, Mohol, Narkhed, and Patkule ; three in the Pandharpur sub-division one each at Bhaloni, Karkam, and Pandharpur ; two in the Malsiras sub-division one each at Akluj and Natepute ; and four in the Sangola sub-division one each at Gherdi, Jaule, Nazre, and Sangola. At these places petty traders, peddlers, and hawkers set up booths and offer for sale their goods consisting of cotton, grain, groceries, spices, cloth, yarn, oils, earthenware, clarified butter, hides, and fuel. Of these the local production of grain and oil meets local wants with a margin for export in good years. These markets are held generally for the whole day. In some places they are held during the heat of the day and are closed in the evening. Sholapur is the largest market ; it is held on every Tuesday and the buyers and sellers number about 10,000. It is a distributing as well as a gathering centre The producers themselves sell grain, earthenware, yarn, and garden produce. Fuel is sold by Mhars and other low caste people who gather it in the neighbouring forest lands. Lingayats, Gujars and Marwaris mostly sell groceries. The sellers are chiefly from Sholapur and the surrounding villages. The buyers are the townspeople and traders or their agents. There is little barter. Cattle markets are held in almost all trade centres. At Sholapur, is a considerable cattle market, where cows, she-buffaloes, ponies, and sheep and goats are offered for sale. No change has lately been made in the local market system ....." [8]

KOLHAPUR DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1886

"....Of the twelve chief trade centres and market towns two are in Karvir, at Kolhapur and Sangrul ; four in Panhala at Kadoli, Male, Panhala, and Sarud ; one in Alta at Vadgaon ; one in Gadinglaj at Gadinglaj ; two in Vishalgad at Kapsi and Malkapur ; one in Kagal at Murgud ; and one in Ichalkaranji at Ichalkaranji. Except at Ichalkaranji where a market is held twice a week, at all these places markets are held once a week. These markets are spreading as well as gathering centres. Of the imports and exports at Kolhapur, grain, cloth, earthenware, baskets, and cattle largely come from neighbouring places ; most of these articles find their way to Nipani in Belgaum and Chiplun and Rajapur in Ratnagiri. From Sangrul rice is largely sent to Nipani and other places. At Kadoli grain is largely sold ; from Kadoli cotton, molasses and chillies, and from Panhala rice are largely sent. At Sarud grain is brought in large quantities and cloth exported. At Vadgaon, which is a large trade centre, dates, cocoa-kernel, sugar, and English yarn are brought from the sea ports, and a number of cattle from neighbouring places for sale ; and besides chillies, tobacco and wheat and other grains, molasses is largely exported. At Gadinglaj the chief trade is in grain, coarse cloth, and cattle. At Kapsi the local dealers take grain, chillies, and other articles for sale to Islampur, Miraj, Sangli, and Tasgaon. At Malkapur grain and cattle come from neighbouring villages, and cocoanuts, dates and other articles from Ratnagiri ports. The chief exports are rice, jvari, wheat, grain, and chillies. At Murgud grain comes in large quantities from neighbouring villages and rice is exported. At Ichalkaranji grain and cattle are brought for sale. Besides at the large trade centres, forty-seven small weekly markets are held. Of these seven are in Karvir at Bida, Dhamoda, Hassurbudruk, Kandgaon, Khebavda, Shiroti, and Thikpurli ; five are in Panhala at Bajar-Bhogaon, Kalhen, Kotholi, Padal, and Pishvi ; six are in Shirol at Chinchli, Ghosarvad, Nandni, Parmanand-Vadi, Raybag, and Shirol ; eight are in Alta at Alta, Hatkalangda, Herla, Hupri, Kumbhoj, Rendal, Rukdi, and Savgav ; six are in Gadinglaj at Halkarni, Harli, Kadgaon, Kapsi, Katkol, and Nesari ; seven are in Bhudargad at Madilge, Saravde, Shengaon, Shevpur, Tarla, Valivda, and Valva ; one is in Vishalgad at Mahagaon ; three are in Bavda at Bavda, Rashivda, and Tisangi ; three are in Kagal, at Chikhli Kagal and Mangaon ; and one is in Ichalkaranji at Ajra ....." KOLHAPUR DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1960

"....In assembling and distributing goods, next to the wholesale trade centres come the market places and periodical bazars as they are called, held at different places and on different days in the district. In many villages and towns markets are periodically held, once or twice a week or on a fixed day or days. Fairs and these weekly bazars are complementary to each other.

The total number of bazars held in the district is about 83. The value of the business carried on at these places on the bazar day or days shows a wide range from a minimum of Rs. 100 to Rs. 50,000. Particular mention may be made of the following places where a considerable amount of business is transacted viz., Wadgaon (Rs. 50,000) in Hatkanangale taluka, Gadhinglaj (Rs. 48,000) in Gadhinglaj taluka, Ghotawade (Rs. 10,000) in Radhanagari taluka and Jaisingpur, Kurundwad and Shirol (Rs. 12,000 each) in Shirol taluka....." [10]

BULDHANA DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1910

"....Altogether 97 weekly markets are held in the District, giving one for 38 square miles of area and for 14 villages on an average. The principal market of the District is that of Khamgaon, where the value of the weekly trade is estimated to be Rs. 50,000. Of this amount cotton is responsible for Rs. 46,000, and other articles dealt in are oil, raw sugar, and wheat which are imported from Jalna, Mehkar, and other places adjoining the borders of Hyderabad. Next in importance is the market of Nandura, which is the biggest cattle market in the District, and where cattle of an estimated value of Rs. 1,200 change hands every week. This market has grown in importance lately owing to the reputation of the carts (known as damni small cart, and daman large cart) imported here from Khandesh and sold for prices varying from Rs. 35 to Rs. 70 a cart. The value of all articles sold is estimated to be Rs. 11,200 per week. Asalgaon in the Jalgaon taluka stands third in the District, with weekly sales of Rs. 4,400, of which Rs. 1,000 represents the value of the cattle sold. Other villages with cattle markets, where the average weekly sales vary from Rs. 250 to Rs. 500 are Janephal, Malkapur, Pangra and Hirdao in the Mehkar taluk. Shegaon is the second cotton mart in the District, with weekly sales of the value of Rs. 900. Motla, which lies half-way between Buldana and Malkapur, is the chief market for the supply of all kinds of grain, especially wheat imported from the country above the Ghat. Here also is brought for sale the teakwood from the Ajanta hills, the value of the weekly trade being estimated at Rs. 3,500. Chikhli and Malkapur possess grain markets of some importance. The other markets in the District are of purely local importance, being small gatherings in convenient centres for the supply of the modest needs of the agricultural population.

The bazar cess existed in Berar before the cession under the name of bazar baithak, and its payment is said to have secured for the payer a stall in the regular line of the bazar for the whole time the bazar lasted. It was reintroduced in 1866 on the understanding that all the proceeds were applied to the improvement of the places where the bazar was held in the first place, and subordinately to the improvement of the roads leading to those bazars from the surrounding villages. The maximum and minimum rates for stalls were fixed at 3 annas and 3 pies respectively. In 1879 fresh rules for the levy of the cess were framed, and the rates for stalls were fixed at from 3 pies to 2 annas a week ; animals brought for sale were also charged at rates which varied from 3 annas for a horse to 3 pies for a goat. The cess is at present levied at 45 markets in the District. The right to realize it is annually sold by auction, and the amount realized in 1908-1909 was Rs. 27,416. The money thus collected is placed at the disposal of the District Board which devotes it to the improvements of the bazars....." [11]

AKOLA DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1910

"..... The Berar Gazetteer of 1870, P. 234, says in reference to Akola District : 'The weekly markets have tied over heavy tolls and duties, to which the traders were liable at every village on their line of route, in defaults of a certain protection by the patel of the market village to which they happened to be bound. In order to start a weekly market the patel of the village had to make valuable presents to the traders who attended the inaugurative gathering. The annual fairs (jatras), as they intervene, attract all the traders within wide circles, and are visited by crowds from long distances. Fairs usually have a religious origin. Both the markets and fairs suffered from the dangers attending transport of goods before British rule ; since then they have recovered, and far exceed what they ever were before, even according to local tradition.' Small weekly gatherings which are market in their nature are held in many villages ; no official account is taken of them unless the right of collecting dues (at certain fixed rates) can be sold for Rs. 100 or more ; if the bazar reaches this degree of importance the right of collection is sold by public auctions, and one of the local bodies, receiving the sale-price, makes various provisions of the bazar-building stalls, digging a well, planting trees, or attaching a sweeper to the village as occasion requires. The weekly markets of the four municipal towns are in the hands of the local municipalities and are all of some importance. Including these and the bazars at the jagir villages of Malegaon in Basim taluk and Umarda in Murtizapur, the total number of weekly markets in the District is 75, of which Mangrul taluk contains 9 and Murtizapur 10, and all the other taluks have 13 or 14 apiece. The selling price of the Akola market for the present year, 1909, was Rs. 2,900. Among the village bazars there were 9 which sold for over Rs. 1,000, each Rajanda and Borgaon in Akola taluk, Mundgaon (Rs. 4,755), Malegaon (Rs. 4,000), Asegaon, and Akoli Jagir in Akot, Balapur (Rs. 2,275) and Murtizapur (Rs. 3,150) in the taluks to which they give their names, and Shelu bazar in Mangrul. (The exact price has been given whenever it exceeded Rs. 2,000). Thus Akot taluk, which has many wealthy villages remote from the railway, has by far the most important bazars, its revenue from this source, Rs. 15,500 (excluding municipal bazars), being more than double that of any other taluk ; Basim in fact only provides Rs. 3,000 and Mangrul Rs. 4,000. Basim appears to be outside the busier circles of bazar trade, while the north of Mangrul, where Shelu bazar fetched Rs. 1,500, barely falls within them. Every village in the flatter parts is within reach of a different bazar for almost every day of the week, though of all these a single one would be preferred above the remainder. A number of traders make their living by visiting six or seven important bazars every week, carrying their goods in carts or on ponies almost in anywhere within six or eight miles of a bazar like Malegaon in Akot taluk. On the morning after bazar such traders keep passing singly or in little strings, while on the day itself the chief roads close to the village are hidden in clouds of dust. A bazar village used to be marked by a high white flag, but this is not always noticeable now. A large bazar is a busy sight, but it is very difficult to get reliable figures of the attendance or sales. The chief articles sold are firstly, all kinds of grain; secondly, such groceries as salt, oil, and Indian and other sugar; thirdly, various articles of clothing; fourthly, cattle; and fifthly, a large number of miscellaneous articles such as pots and pans, cotton-seeds, vegetables, betel-leaves, and timber. People who have received payment in kind may exchange their cotton or jawari for other goods. Money-changers attend almost all bazars. Bi-weekly markets are held only at Akot, Basim, and Borgaon; the bazar at Umarda alone lasts for two days....." [12]

AMRAOTI DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1911

"..... The weekly markets however are numerous and important. At the Revision Settlement there were a hundred and fifty in the plains taluks alone. This with ten in the Melghat and a dozen or so which have come into existence since gives an average of one market to every eleven villages, or every nine villages if the Melghat be omitted from the count. Of these by far the most important is still Chandur Bazar, though local residents tell one that it has lost something of its old pre-eminence, having remained almost stationary for the last forty years or even declined in spite of the enormous increase in wealth during that time. The sales are estimated at over half a lakh every week[1] of which some Rs. 35,000 is accounted for by grain and groceries. Chandur also, though not an established cotton market, sees transactions in cotton during the season to a weekly value of about seven thousand rupees; about five thousand of the total is accounted for by livestock. Next to Chandur Bazar in importance comes Ellichpur (Paratwada), the great wood mart for this part of Berar, with weekly sales, aggregating over Rs. 10,000 in value, of which about six thousand is represented by timber and bamboos. Vegetables from Khamla and Chikalda are also an important item. The Amraoti Sunday market (there is one also on Wednesday) and that at Badnera rank next in importance, having an estimated turn-over of about nine and eight thousand respectively. Others in approximate order of importance are Sendurjana Buzurg, Rajura, Anjangaon Surji, Morsi, Mangrul Dastgir, Sendurjana (Malkapur), Hiwarkhed, Khel Tapmali in Ellichpur City, Wanosa (Daryapur), Dattapur, Ner Pingalai. The ten in the Melghat are of merely local importance and the same remark is true of the remainder of those in the plains. Most of the more important markets, it will be noticed, lie close to the hills and they fulfil among other useful functions that of exchanging the products of the jungles and of the fertile plateau of Khamla and Multai against those of Berar. At every village where a bazar is held certain land is set apart for the purpose, and in three markets of the municipal towns and sixty-nine of the markets in the District Board area the traffic is regulated and cesses and stall fees collected according to the bazar rules. In both cases the right to collect the dues is put up to auction annually, market by market and the proceeds of the auction credited to District Board or Municipal funds, as the case may be. In 1908 the sum derived from these auctions was Rs. 12,000 in municipal limits and Rs. 52,970 outside. In return for this the local bodies undertake the upkeep of the bazars concerned, laying down chabutras for merchants and their goods, planting trees and arranging water-supply. The bazars are controlled by Patels and if the latter collect bazar cess they are paid 10 per cent on the collections....." [13]

YEOTMAL DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1908

"..... Weekly markets are held at 116 villages in the District. The more important markets, those at which the weekly sales are on an average above Rs. 1,000 are Yeotmal, Babhulgaon and Akole, in Yeotmal taluk; Ghatanji, Wadhona, Pandharkawada, Ralegaon, Kap, Jhadgaon, Sangwi, Parwi, Mohoda and Bari in Kelapur taluk; Digras, Darwha, Bari Khurd and Lohi in Darwha taluk; and Pusad and Umarkhed, in Pusad taluk. Wun taluk contains only 11 market towns, and at none do the sales exceed Rs. 800. The articles sold are grain, cloth, cooking-pots, vegetables, groceries and miscellaneous articles. Cattle are sold at Yeotmal, Babhulgaon, Ghatanji, Wadhona, Digras and to a less extent elsewhere. The total weekly sales at Ghatanji amounts, according to the imperfect statistics available to Rs. 37,000 of which Rs. 20,000 are for cattle. At Wadhona, a village held on izara tenure the sales come to Rs. 30,000 half being for cattle. Digras has total sales of Rs. 13,000 and Darwha and Yeotmal sales of more than Rs. 5,000. The District Board provides buildings and wells and plants trees at the larger markets. The money is raised by a bazar cess levied in markets where the average attendance is over 200, and the annual sales more than Rs. 200, the rates running from one-quarter anna to three annas a week both for stalls and for livestock. The rate payable depends solely upon the kind of goods for sale, as people are unwilling to pay extra for a place in a covered building or even for the advantage of a seat on a platform (chabutra). The cesses are collected by contractors, who buy the right at an annual auction ....." [14]

WARDHA DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1906

".....The most important weekly markets are those of Wardha, Deoli, Sindi, Selu, Anji, Waiphal, Nachangaon and Andori in the Wardha tahsil; of Samudrapur, Hinganghat, Alipur, Wadner, Pohna, Khangaon, Mandgaon, Girar and Wasi in the Hinganghat tahsil; and of Arvi, Ashti, Karanja, Rasulabad, Wadhona, Kharangna, and Rohna in the Arvi tahsil. Of these Deoli, Wardha, Selu and Anji in Wardha tahsil, Samudrapur in Hinganghat tahsil and Rohna in Arvi tahsil are cattle markets. A registration fee on the sales of cattle is charged at Wardha, Deoli and Arvi. Deoli is the largest cattle market in the District and some hundreds of cattle are brought here every week for sale. The average annual sales during the four years up to 1905 have been about 4,600 head and the total amount realised Rs. 1·40 lakhs. The cattle markets next in importance to Deoli is that of Samudrapur, but no registration fees are charged here. Statistics maintained by the local police show that between 3,000 and 4,000 head of cattle are sold annually at about Rs. 13 a head, this figure including calves. About 1,000 head of cattle and small stock are brought for sale weekly as well as 300 cartloads of grain, timber, oilseeds and bamboos. The attendance in the fair weather months is from 7,000 to 10,000 persons. At Arvi some 3,500 head of cattle are sold annually, the total realisations being Rs. 55,000 and at Wardha 1,350 head for Rs. 21,000. These markets are also the leading ones for the sale of ordinary produce. Cotton is not sold in the weekly markets but is brought direct to Wardha or Hinganghat and sold in the cotton exchange or ganj which is permanently open during the busy season. A road tax and market dues are levied on carts bringing cotton or grain into the towns. Small transactions are conducted through professional dalals or brokers who pay a licence fee to the municipality. Large landowners sell their cotton direct to the mills or exporting agents but they have to pay the town taxes. Mahars act as petty dealers and go round and buy up small quantities of cotton from tenants who have it to dispose of, and having got together a cartload ring it to the town. People of other castes who are generally termed Beparis ply the same trade with grain. But if the tenant is dissatisfied with the price offered, he himself brings his grain or cotton to the market town. Market dues are also levied at Nachangaon, Sindi, Ashti, Alipur, Girar and Pohna, and the sums realised are expended on village sanitation. In all these villages considerable quantities of grain and timber are sold, and Marwari or Cutchi dealers have taken up their residence in them....." [15]

BHANDARA DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1908

"..... There are over a hundred weekly markets in the District or one for every 40 square miles and 18 villages. Amgaon is a very important cattle-market, at which a large number of head of buffaloes are sold, and many worn-out animals are disposed of to the butchers. In 1904, 35,000 head were sold at Amgaon, of which 16,000 were cows and 10,000 male buffaloes. The income from registration fees was Rs. 5,000. Lakhandur and Kitari in Sakoli tahsil are also important cattle-markets, and a few animals are brought to several of the larger village bazars. Gondia and Kanti on the Satpura railway are the largest markets in Tirora tahsil; Tumsar, Mohali and Bhandara in the Bhandara tahsil; and Lakhandur, Kitari, Phora and Lakhni in Sakoli tahsil. Lakhandur is an important timber market, as is Mundhri in Tirora. The best rice is sold at Tirora bazar. Mohali is a large cloth-market....." [16]

CHANDA DISTRICT GAZETTEER, 1909

".....The District contains 66 weekly markets of which 7 lie in the Chanda tahsil, 21 in Warora, 14 in Gadchiroli and 5 in the Sironcha tahsil. This is equivalent to a market for every 154 square miles and 57 villages. Of these the principal cattle markets are those held at Chanda, Warora, Jambulghata, Madheri, Gadchiroli, Armori, Garbori, Nawargaon and Bramhapuri. At Madheri and Jambulghata a considerable number of bullocks are sold. Those sold at Madheri are usually of the fine Berar breed, while at Jambulghata are found heavy bullocks from Nagpur for black soil and the small hardy breed from the eastern jungles of the District suitable for rice country. At Nawargaon about 500 cattle are brought every week for sale. But sales of cattle are registered at two places only, viz., at Chanda and Warora. Registration is compulsory at Warora and optional at Chanda, and a fee is levied at the rate of three pies per rupee. The amount realised on this account in Chanda was Rs. 1,106 in 1906-07 which would indicate sales of the value of Rs. 70,000. In Warora during the same year the fee realised was Rs. 233 showing that the value of cattle sold was about Rs. 15,000. Cattle are also sold at Pathri and Rajgarh markets.

The most important markets for the ordinary produce in the open and semi-rice tracts are held at Chanda and Dabha in Chanda tahsil, Warora, Chimur and Jambulghata in Warora tahsil and at Bramhapuri in the Bramhapuri tahsil. Dabha is important since it is the entrepot of all export trade to Hyderabad. Jambulghata is a large cloth bazar. The position Mul occupies makes it an important feeder market to Chanda and it is, as it were the neck of the bottle through which all cart traffic between Chanda and a large part of the interior of the District must pass. Armori has naturally become the most important mart of the eastern half of the District and the weekly bazar held on Friday is a very considerable one, the traffic in cloth and cattle being particularly heavy. Formerly also this was the great entrepot for the disposal of iron smelted in the east of the District, but of late years the output of this has much declined. A good deal of forest produce also is brought here. These two, Mul and Armori, along with Nawargaon near Garbori are the best bazars in the heavy rice tracts. From Nawargaon the grain is taken across country by cart-tracks to Hinganghat or Nagpur: from Armori it goes to Bramhapuri and from Mul, as said before, to Chanda. These three bazars are therefore simply feeder markets for the larger markets of this District and the Districts adjoining. At Nawargaon and Armori cloth is also largely sold; so also at Bhandak. Chamursi and Talodhi are also bazars of some importance. With the exception of the apology for a bazar at Asaralli there is absolutely no open market in the Sironcha tahsil. The consequence is that there is practically no trade transaction worthy of the names. Each cultivator, rich or poor, has a running account for food, seed, clothes and small sums of money with one or other local sahukars. He borrows his rent from the same person and in payment hands over the whole of his agricultural produce. Very occasionally the sahukar returns some of it to him over and above his needs for the year; such surplus is peddled out in the Asaralli bazar. During the last three years Sironcha trade has been slightly stimulated by the arrival of a Marwari from Chanda who is said to send juari occasionally to Chanda, but it will be some years before he can create much competiton. The itinerant petty traders in the District are known as Bhasares who may be either Telis, Marars, Kalars, Kunbis or Dhers. They go round from village to village buying grain of all kinds and in any quantities from tenants which they subsequently sell in the bigger markets to wholesale dealers who are either Cutchis, Komtis or Marwaris. Cotton is collected from the growers of the Wardha Valley by petty traders or large dealers who are usually Marwaris of the Wun taluk. It is ginned locally and sent by road to Hinganghat mills. Til, linseed, juari and wheat are also brought to market in small quantities, but the greater part is taken by dealers at harvest either in accordance with a specific agreement in repayment of an advance on the harvest or in satisfaction of some other debt....." List of Weekly Markets in Maharashtra

EXPLANATORY NOTE

In this list of market villages and towns, names of urban areas are printed in italics and Taluka Headquarters and District Headquarters are marked by one asterisk (*) and two asterisks (), respectively. Towns or Cities having Municipality are indicated by use of symbol (M).

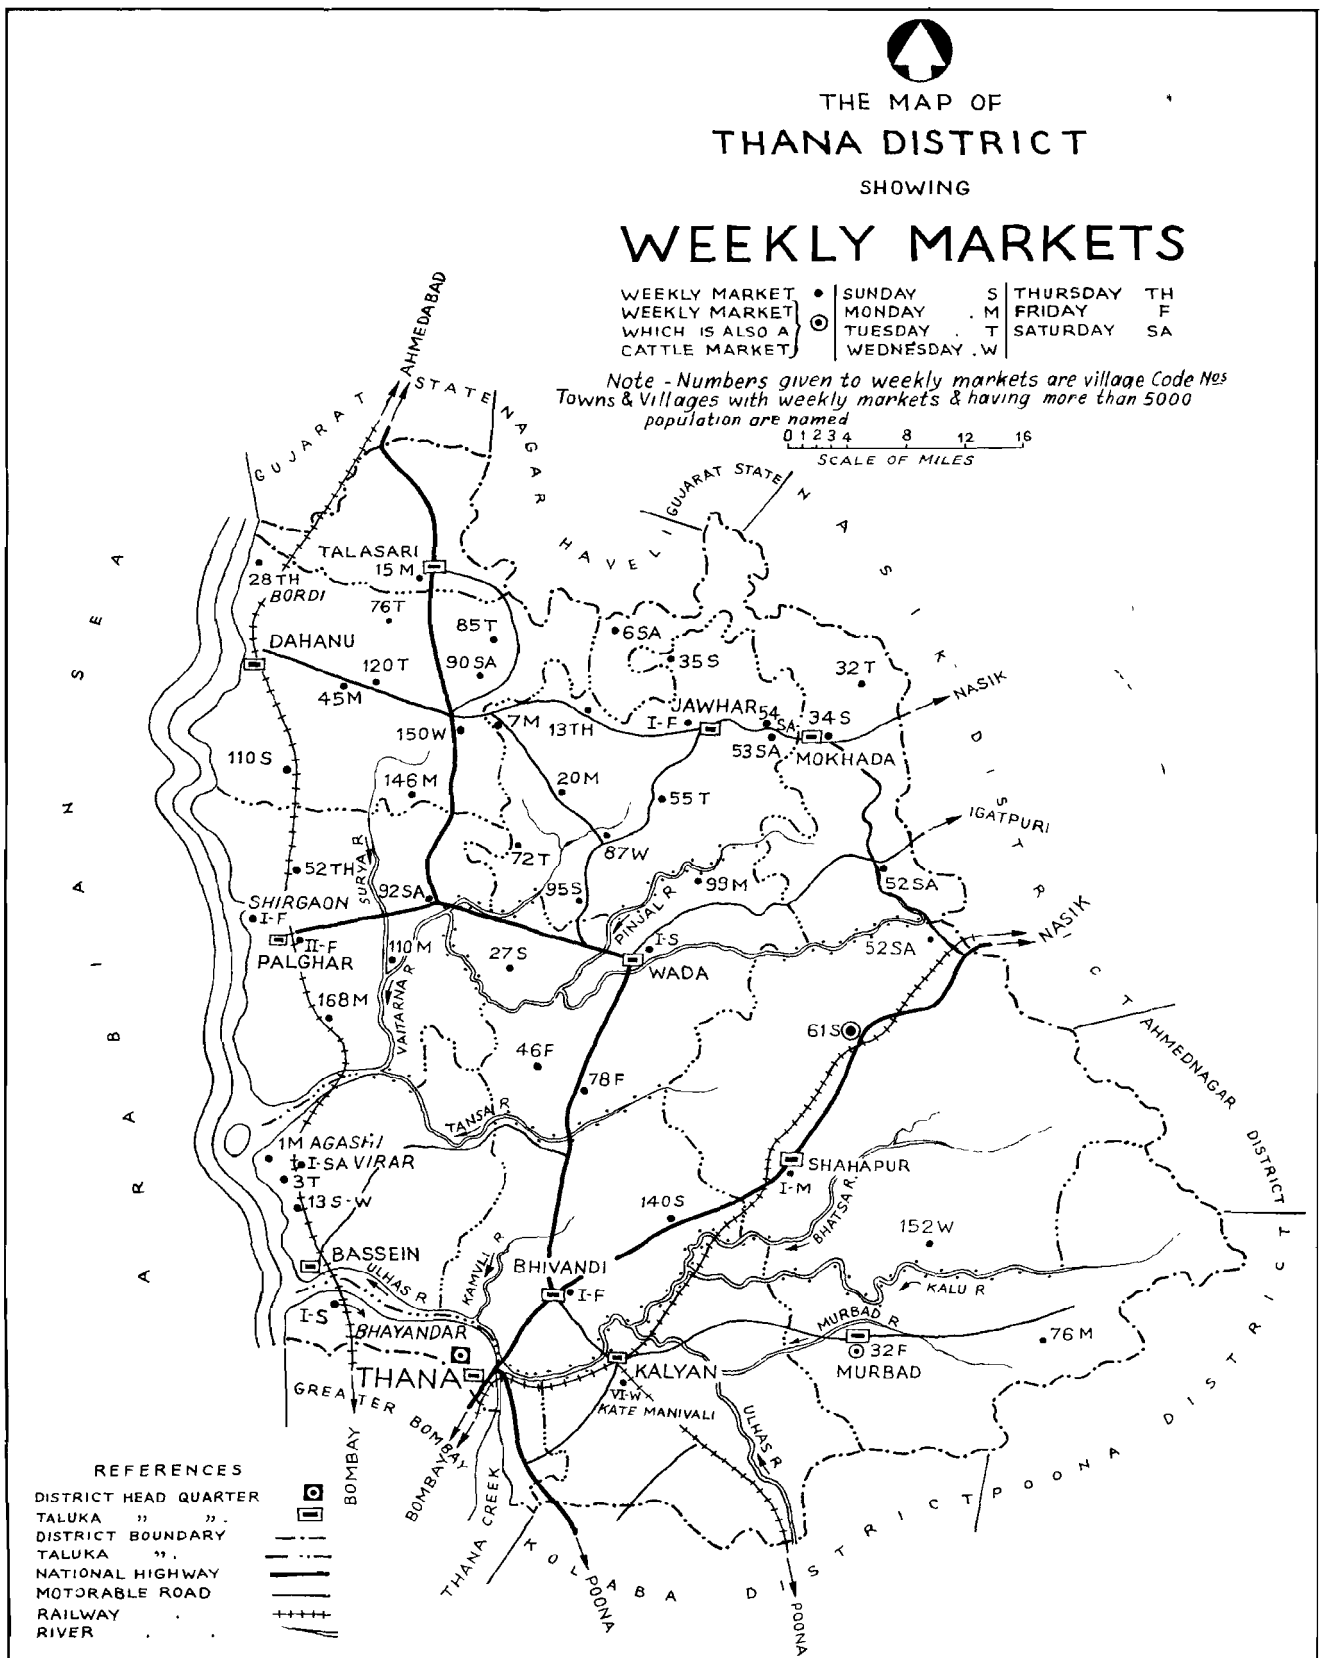

Area figures in column 2 have been obtained either from the Mamlatdars/Tahasildars or taken from the 1951 Census Handbooks. Information contained in columns 5 to 13 of the list is based on village enumeration reports prepared by the Tahasildar, or Patwaris during October/November 1960, at the time of house numbering and house listing operations of 1961 Population Census. The population figures in column 4 relate to the residential population of the village or town as enumerated with reference to the 1st of March 1961, which was the Census reference day.

The day or days on which weekly bazar is held are indicated in column 5. There are certain villages where cattle markets are also held along with weekly bazars. Against such villages abbreviation C.M. for cattle market will be found in column 6. Various facilities and amenities available in the villages and towns have been shown by use of the following abbreviations in columns 7 to 13 :—

At the beginning of the list of market villages and towns for each district a district map showing weekly markets is also printed. Each village and town having a weekly market is shown in the map by its location code number assigned to it within a taluka. With the help of the Taluka boundary, the name of the Taluka Headquarters and the location code number it will not be difficult to locate the market village in the map. Besides location code number, the day on which market is held is indicated by use of first letter "S" for Sunday, "M" for Monday, etc. Weekly market which is also a cattle market is denoted by a symbol ⊙. Names of the Towns and Villages with weekly markets and having more than 5,000 population are printed on the maps.
